allow this program permanent funding this year. The Vice President of Student Affairs has committed $92,000 in support of the program and to work on finding sufficient funding within the next three years. But without the support of the Student Services Fee this year and next, students will no longer have a free service to help support them in these critical courses. Passing College Algebra for example is critical to a majority of majors. MASTR provides the safety net for these students. As a measure of generating additional funding, MASTR is piloting a set of exam review sessions, for fee, this semester. Currently the charge is $15.00 per review session. Although there is much work to be done, a steady increase in student attendance has occurred between the first and second exams. The goal is that this type of service will offset 10-20% of drop-in tutoring costs each year. The true financial impact of these sessions remains to be seen.
